Presidents Message from Connie Emmons

Dear members,

We had a great November meeting and enjoyed seeing so many hand made cards for our Gladstone Meals On Wheels. Another big thank you to Barbara Seliner for great gifts for gift prizes for the drawing. She has also delivered all the cards we made every month throughout this year.

I want to mention the great job our Hostesses, Dee Todd and Kathy Brown have done for us this year as well! Beautiful table settings!! We really appreciate each and every one who continue to support and join in our work and fun.

Speaking of fun: Dont forget : bring any old Christmas cards next meeting, as we will be making collage Christmas cards for the Meals on Wheels project. It should be a fun activity for the group.

We really enjoy our guest artists with such great demos. This past month we had Cindy Lommasson, doing Chinese Brush and ink drawings.

Remember we all need to BRING FOOD FOR THE POTLUCK ON TUESDAY DECEMBER THE 8TH. We will have door prizes and dont forget our In-House competition with a December/Christmas Theme!

Wednesdays are Studio Day here at the Oak Lodge Water District Building and we still have room for more artists. We have been meeting to paint from 9:30-1pm each week. Come join us and enjoy the comraderie of painting with other artists.

Have fun creating, and see you next meeting!
Sincerely,
Connie Emmons

Happy Holidays to All

Famous Artist Quote

"A painting is never finished - it simply stops in interesting places." - Paul Gardner

Gardner has developed an abstract and highly textural style of painting using many types of mixed media. He explores the depictions of the earth's components and how they relate to each other.

Shown above is his tide pools painting.

Annual NCAG Holiday Party Dec 8th

Bring your favorite Pot Luck dish to share. Guild will supply beverages. It's time for Holiday socializing with other artists and having some fun.

We will be making collage Cards from the fronts of old Christmas cards you may have lying around (or you can share with what others bring). The Guild will supply blank cards and envelopes for the project. Cards will be donated to the Gladstone Meals on Wheels, our ongoing community project.

And we hope everyone has a Holiday or Winter themed painting to enter into the In House Competition, as well as a painting for the December Critique (lots to carry). No formal meeting or Demo in December but we are hoping to have info to share on what to include in an artist's Bio, useful for some shows you may enter and for the Guild website as well! Your free members website page is a great place to include a few examples of your work , your Bio and your contact info if you want to sell or advertise for commission art work.

Change of Plan for showing Workshop artwork:
those that attended Shirlee Linds Oct workshops are asked to bring art to the January meeting instead of December as was announced at the last meeting.

Cindy Lommasson brought Zen to Demo

Sumi-e is the word for ink, and also the term for brush painting. Our November Demo, presented by Chinese Brush Painting artist Cindy Lommasson, was filled with info and ways to add some Zen to the creative experience we call painting.

The examples she brought with her were simple in composition and restful to the eye.

A traditionalist at heart, she employs a monochromatic palette for much of her work .

As an artist she paints what she enjoys painting , primarily landscapes of mountains, trees, coastal mist and fog. And she likes to represent the world with the simplicity of black and white- so ink is a perfect medium for her.

As we listened to her explain the materials she uses to produce her paintings, she transported us back to an ancient time. Chinese brush painting involves ‘four treasures’...Ink stick, grinding stone, brushes and paper. The ink stick she used was a hardened dry stick that is mixed with water and ground slowly against a grinding stone that has a well at one end to collect the ink. The ink can be made any shade by lengthening the grinding time and allowing more of the hardened stick to mix with the water. She usually takes about 5 minutes to grind a tablespoon of ink stained water ...and feels it is very soothing to grind the ink and release the earthy incense it emits. There was also a bottle of premade ink that she sometimes uses, but it was obvious she prefers the traditional methods surrounding this Zen process as it allows time for meditation as well as a variety of ink thickness and darkness values. The third ‘treasure’ material was her brushes, with names depicting what you paint with them, ie. The Magnolia brush, the Leaf Vein brush, the Happy Dot brush and the Orchid/ Bamboo brush. Each type of brush came in different sizes and was made of coarse hair (like badger or weasel and some horsehair). The last ‘treasure’ was her paper. Cindy uses Shuen Paper, handmade from the bark of a tree that only grows in China.

When she does use color she uses Japanese paints, which conform to lead standards (something Chinese colors are not known for doing). These paints came in sets with elongated rectangles of color . Brushes are loaded with slow repetitive stroking, no twisting of the brush during loading.

To do the Oak leaf demo, she triple loaded the brush in 3 different colors then pressed the brush to paper to make the colorful leaves.

Bamboo stalks were made using a push, pull, push stroke that widened the ends of each section of stalks. By varying the size of the brush she could easily make thicker or thinner bamboo stalks.

The ink seeps into and through the paper . When the paper was turned over, the painting was still visible and the back side of the paper was where Cindy added a background color wash. She wetted a portion of the paper at a time and quickly added colors, allowing them to merge as watercolors like to do when done wet on wet.

I found myself relaxing just watching her paint.

Thanks Cindy for sharing this serene technique.

For info on classes and more about her art see her website www.cindylommasson.com

Paint for Fun Day Held Nov 14th

NCAG members converged on a Saturday for a painting event, one where Members could come and just paint together for fun. The nice thing about doing it on a Saturday is it affords Members who cant always attend a weekday meeting to get together with other artists and just enjoy painting whatever they want to work on. Jerry Schmidt provided photos of the participants below:

Revolving Art Update

New art is hanging at the Gladstone DMV by Danna Barnes and at the Oak Lodge Water District Bldg by Linda Fields. Some of the Art by Linda shown below.

Watercolor Paper Available at December meeting!

NCAG Member Kay McKay is moving and selling a large amount of her water color paper at a reduced rate from its purchase price. Paper will be available to purchase at the December 8th meeting so if you are a water colorist or wanting to try this medium here is your chance to get a paper supply for a real bargain price! A portion of the proceeds will benefit the Guild and the rest will go back to Kay.

Thanks Kay for thinking of the artists in the Guild as you transition to a smaller living space.

Peoples Choice Award
